CAM Superline Paint Process.

CAM Superline follows a multi-step paint process to give your trailers the best possible protection against fading, peeling and corroding.

In preparation for painting, all of our trailers are acid washed with phosphate. This washing process cleans all the dirt and oil from the metal surfaces that occur as a result of the manufacturing process. The phosphate wash also etches the metal surfaces allowing for better paint adhesion as well as providing a layer of corrosion resistance.

After the drying process, all of the necessary joints are seam sealed. We then apply an epoxy primer as a second layer of corrosion resistance for better paint adhesion. In the event of paint chipping the corrosion does not spread due to the presence of the primer.

All CAM Superline trailers are finished with a two-component, industrial grade, polyurethane paint; providing a finish that is extremely resistant to fading, peeling and corroding.
